SMOKING CESSATION

The leading preventable cause of illness and premature death in the United States today is cigarette smoking. Each year, smoking causes approximately 155,000 deaths from cancer, 122,000 deaths from heart disease and stroke, and 72,000 deaths from lung disease. Additionally, secondhand smoke is responsible for 50,000 deaths of non-smokers annually. More than 25 percent of the U.S. adult population smoke. Of these, 70 percent would like to quit. Smokers who try to quit are more successful if they have the support of their physician or other health care provider.

In June 2000, HHS released a new smoking cessation guideline that reflects current research on treating tobacco use and addiction. "Treating Tobacco Use and Dependence: A Clinical Practice Guideline" is aimed at practicing clinicians. It contains evidence-based information about first-line pharmacologic therapies (nicotine gum, patches, inhalers, and nasal sprays) and second-line therapies (clonidine and nortriptyline). It also provides new evidence about how telephone counseling can help patients quit smoking. Copies of this guideline can be obtained by calling 1-800-358-9295 or access the Internet at <http://www.surgeongeneral.gov/tobacco/default.htm>

ACCESS TO QUALITY HEALTH CARE SERVICES

Despite the improvements that have been made to the U.S. health care system, Americans continue to experience wide disparities in the quality of health care they receive. The literature indicates that there are several reasons for this. Many Americans do not have access to affordable health insurance while others do not enroll even when offered this insurance. Services or providers that are needed are not covered in their health insurance. Patients are not allowed to choose among plans, institutions or clinicians to select the care they prefer. Appropriate referral services are not available even if primary care is available. Research indicates that ensurance of high quality health care for all Americans requires that each of the above issues are recognized and addressed. AHRQ recently funded a study on the obstacles to high quality health care that Americans face.

ALTERNATIVE MEDICINE AND MENTAL DISORDERS

Alternative medicine includes therapies for managing health and disease that do not fall within the realm of conventional medicine. The literature indicates that the mental disorders most frequently reported by patients seeking treatment from alternative medicine include depression and anxiety. Individuals with these conditions often use alternative therapies without informing their mental health providers. Research indicates that the providers' knowledge of these alternative therapies and their patients' use of them may prevent potentially harmful interactions between conventional and alternative treatments. NIMH is currently reviewing protocols and funding ongoing research to evaluate the effectiveness of alternative medicine for depression and dementia.

NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE CORPS

The underserved can be found in rural and urban communities across the country. The literature indicates that they lack access to primary medical care, dentists, and mental health services. One of the major causes for this underservice is maldistribution of clinicians. Research indicates that in order to reduce health care disparities for this population, the preparation, recruitment, and retention of community-responsive, culturally competent primary care clinicians is needed. HRSA's National Health Service Corps encourages health professionals to spend all, or part, of their careers in service to the underserved by offering scholarships to finance medical education, mentorship programs, loan repayment, and career opportunities.

PHARMACOLOGICAL TREATMENT OF DRUG ABUSE

With the pending approval of buprenorphine by the FDA and the release of final regulations designed to improve the oversight of methadone programs, real progress is expected in integrating treatment of opiate addiction into mainstream medicine. The literature indicates that training physicians in the use of methadone and buprenorphine also includes educating them about the opiate-addicted population. Physicians who prescribe these medications also need to have the capacity and understanding to refer patients to support services such as counseling. Research indicates that pharmacological treatments of opiate addiction have their best outcomes when combined with an education component or therapy. After FDA approves buprenorphine, CSAT, SAMHSA will be actively involved in setting up training sessions for physicians and will be actively promoting the use of buprenorphine and methadone in locations where opiate use is high. They will also release treatment guidelines for physicians .

SUDDEN INFANT DEATH SYNDROME

Sudden Infant Death Syndrome (SIDS) is defined as the sudden death of any infant or child under one year old which is unexplained by any physical or clinical evidence. The literature indicates that in the U.S., SIDS is the leading cause of infant mortality beyond the neonatal period. The incidence of SIDS has dropped by almost half since the recommendation that parents place infants on their backs or sides when sleeping. Research indicates that the factors which place an infant at increased risk of SIDS are prone sleeping position, overheating, and parental smoking. NCHS has data on SIDS in their annual report entitled Health, United States 2000.
